“In Politics, the Other is a Good.” Starting from this provocative statement and title of a chapter in Julian Carron’s book “Disarming Beauty”, we want to examine the current political situation in an original way. The prevalent position of perceiving ‘the other side’ as an enemy to be reduced has left us in political gridlock - a dissatisfying experience tempting us to lose interest in what is going on in the world, or to simply avoid participation in anything with the label “politics”.

Through a conversation with gubernatorial candidate Doug Robinson, we hope to explore the political theme with fresh eyes - starting with Robinson’s own motivation to run for governor and his desire to create positive change through political engagement. All are invited to bring their own questions to this dynamic discussion.
